

New Edition from Westview Press!

“This latest edition of ‘Can We All Get Along?’, arriving as it does in the recent wake of the paradigm-shifting election of President Obama, gives students and instructors alike the updated comparative data and nuanced interpretation they need to understand the magnitude of racial and ethnic politics in the U.S.”
—David E. Wilkins, University of Minnesota

Asking crucial questions and incorporating the latest research, this updated overview of minority politics in America features:

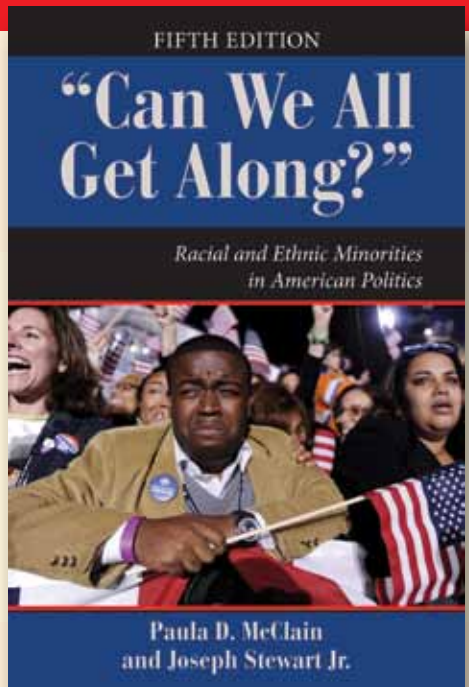

- A unique and accessible analytical approach. Traditional elements of political science analysis are combined with a survey of four major groups.

- A thorough, fully updated survey on the political statuses of blacks, Latinos, Asian Americans, and American Indians, addressing these groups' political action and experience and pointing the way toward coalition, competition, and consensus building in the face of ongoing conflict.

- New material addressing the outcome of the 2008 presidential election.
